

Rev'd. Steve Wilkinson

I was born in Yorkshire and after leaving school joined the police, working firstly in London and then later in Manchester. Later, whilst leading a parallel life as a university lecturer and chaplain to the police I trained for ordination in Manchester before taking up a post as curate at a church in Lancashire.

I've been involved in education for nearly fifteen years, initially training teachers and then as a school governor and see our church school as a vital part of the community here in the village. I love science, especially the bits where it crashes into religion, looking after our sheep and make shepherd's crooks to relax.
